AUGUST MAGAZINES.

Tennyson is given the place of honor in the August Century, as well as in one or two other magazines of the month. His portrait forms the frontispiece, and Henry Vandyke contributes an essay on "The Bible in Tennyson," in which he points out the great frequency of biblical quotations and allusions in the poet's work and the proofs of his religious faith. "The Stream of Pleasure," described with pen and pen-cil by Joseph and Elizabeth Pennell, is the Thames, and as thus pictured it merits the title. Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's scientific study of "The Poison of Snakes" is made horribly fascinating by the numerous lifehorribly fascinating by the numerous lifelike illustrations of venomous serpents, which accompany it. Kennan's "State Criminals at the Kara Mines" forms, with the chapter in the July issue, one of the lectures delivered in his course last season. Those who listened to the thrilling story will read it with no less interest. Frederic Remington, in his "Artist Wanderings Among the Cheyennes," suggests a change in Indian management by the government that is worthy of consideration. The Lincoln History deals with some features of the political campain of 1864, with the conspiracies of rebel sympathizers in the North, and also gives much interesting information concerning the relation of Lincoln to the churches and the lation of Lincoln to the churches and the attitude of the latter in relation to the war. A notable feature of the number is the series of articles on wood-engraving, by members of an engraving club. The writers maintain that engraving should cease to be considered as merely a copying process, but should take rank as an original art, and that the work, whether copy or original, has merit according to the artistic perception and training of the engraver. The illustrations from original drawings on the block go far to prove the point in question, and illustrate in more senses than one. Joel Chandler Harris presents the first chapter of a serial entitled, "The Old Bascom Place," the scene of which is laid in Georgia of the control of th Place," the scene of which is laid in Georgia after the war. George W. Cable describes an episode of slave life in New Orleans, and Edward Bellamy contributes "A Positive Romance." "Fra Angelico and His Work" is the subject of W. J. Stillman's paper in the "Old Masters Series." Robert Burns Wilson's "Song of the Woodland Spirit" is noteworthy not only for its pure and true poetic feeling, but for the skill in versification and the verbal facility shown by the writer. shown by the writer.

After the repeated announcement by the publishers of Belford's Magazine that the editorial policy of the periodical had been changed, and that instead of being an organ for the expression of free-trade ideas exclusively it would henceforth occupy an independent political attitude, the appearance of a new number, in a new and more artistic cover, naturally arouses curiosity and leads to a closer examination than a confessedly Democratic paper might secure. The opening paper, by John F. Hume, entitled "Have We Abolished Slavery?" is an argument to prove that so long as a pro-tective tariff is imposed, so long slavery exists. "The New and the Old in the South," is a panegyric on the refinement, and culture, and exalted sense of honor of the Southerners before the war and of the better class now, and a complaint that no literature either of the earlier or later period does this chivalric people justice. Of the editorials one urges the folly of making any citizen of New York the next Demo-cratic presidential candidate. It is well, says the writer, for the Democracy of the says the writer, for the Democracy of the country and "those persons of independent judgments who find themselves by force of circumstances in association with the Democracy" to consider the possibilities in this direction. Another editorial comments in an unfriendly way upon the civil-service record of the present administration; another is a bitter criticism of the course of the United States in the Samoan affair, and the character of the final editorial utterance may be judged from the heading "Wanamakered." The casual reader, with the old-fashioned meaning of the term "independent" in his mind, would hardly place Belford in this category politically if judged by this issue alone; but as both sides are promised a "fair show" it is no more than just to await future numbers before reachust to await future numbers before reaching conclusions. Congressman Reed, of Maine, is to contribute two articles, one on "Protection" and one on "The Republican Party." Perhaps when these appear the accompanying editorials will be of similar tone, and thus "independence" in the modern sense be preserved. The literary features of the issue including a complete party. ures of the issue, including a complete nov-el, are meritorious.

The August Forum opens with a paper by John G. Carlisle on "The Republican Programme," in which he defends and praises the Cleveland administration, and predicts disaster to the country if what he assumes to be the Republican programme is carried out. Ex-Governor Hoadly, of Ohio, explains the advantages and defects of the Australian election system, and incidentally argues in favor of publicity concerning campaign expenses. Bishop Cleveland Coxe sees many dangers to republican in-stitutions in the rapid increase of Coxe sees many dangers to republican institutions in the rapid increase of the foreign population. Bearing on the same line is an article by A. L. Bartlett, showing the dangers to the public-school system of Massachusetts, and the same line is an article by an article by an article by an article by be seen in the county and several less in his charge of about $7,000, besides flerging his friends of a supplier of the second and several estates in his charge of about $7,000, besides flerging his friends of a supplier of the second and several estates in his charge of about $7,000, besides flerging his friends of a supplier of the second and several estates in his charge of about $7,000, besides flerging his friends of a supplier of the second and t olitical characteristics of the State from the growth of Catholicism the State from the growth of Catholicism and the foreign immigration. Edward Atkinson, the political economist, solves "The Problem of Poverty" by demonstrating that existing conditions of trade do not bear more heavily upon the laborer than upon the capitalist, nor, on the other hand, favor the latter more, and that the share of wealth each man may secure for his own use and enjoyment depends upon the development of his individual character and capacity. The paper on "Prohibition and License," by Senator Ingalls, of Kan-" by Senator Ingalls, of Kan-will attract much attention sas, will attract much attention from the testimony it contains to the efficiency of the prohibitory law in his State. "The Extinction of Leisure," by Alfred H. Peters, is a protest against the absorption of the energies of this generation in the struggle for wealth to the sacrifice of health and enjoyment of life. It is an essay that might be read with profit by every man who allows "business" to absorb his vital forces. Other contributions to the issue are "Canada's Form of Government," by Judge James J. Love, of lowa; "The Abuse of Fiction," by Walter Lewin, and "Defects of the Coroner System," by Dr. W. S. Abbott.

Three articles in the North American Review for August relate to the Johnstown disaster. Governor Beaver writes of relief funds received and the manner of their distribution. Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross Society, describes the actual work of relief, and Major Powell, director of the United States geological survey, furnishes the "Lesson of Conemaugh" in a dessertation on the building of dams. Viscount Wolseley continues his criticisms of the military movements of the civil war. Rev. Lyman Abbott has "A Word with Professor Huxley" upon the definitions given by the latter of the word "agnostic." Prof. N. S. Shaler is impressed with "The Sense of Honor in Americans," and finds no Sense of Honor in Americans," and finds no decadence in this respect during the first century of national life. Prof. David Swing answers the question, "Will Reason Exterminate Christianity?" and Henry Cleves reviews the course of Great Britain in regard to the Southern Confederacy. Other contributions are: "Personal Recollections of the German Army," by Karl Blind; "The Cash Value of a Book Review," by O. R. Bunce, and "The Poetry of Poyer. by O. B. Bunce, and "The Poetry of Poverty," by Henry B. Carpenter.

A new English art publication is the "Century Guild Hobby Horse," reissued in New York by White, Stokes & Allen. Its object, as set forth by the editor, is to render all branches of art no longer of the tradesman, but of the artist. "It would restore building, decoration, glass-painting, pottery, wood-carving and metal-work to their rightful place beside painting and sculpture. By so placing them they would once more by regarded as legitimate and once more be regarded as legitimate and honored expressions of the artistic spirit, and would stand in their true relation, not drama, to music, and to literature." of a colored man named J. F. Platte, who It is a handsome and artistic publication as to paper, type and illustration, and is issued quarterly. Price, 75 cents per num-

The Decorator and Furnisher contains in each issue a great amount of practical information concerning house-building and house-refitting, and is of value, both to the architect and the occupant of the house.

His windpipe was fractured, and, after suffering terrible ago-ny, he died. His body, on account of the escape of air which should have gone into his lungs, was twice its normal size. Three showmen are under arrest.

Not Much Chance of Opening "the Strip." TAHLEQUAH, I. T., Aug. 9.—To the great surprise of every one, the complete returns from to-day's election of members of the Cherokee Legislature show the success of a large majority of the Dowing party's candidates, who are all supporters of Chief Mayes's policy against the sale of the strip to the government. Chief Mayes has not returned a reply to the commissioners' offer, as he promised. He was expected here to-day. The commission can do nothing to-day. The commission can do nothing until his answer is received.

Pistol Practice in the South.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 9.—The latest South Carolina shooting affray occurred in Laurens county yesterday, when O. W. Lansford, a prominent citizen, shot and killed Barrett Langston, both white. A vendetta between the Lansfords and the Langstons has been declared, and both families are now on the war-path.

special to the Indianapolis Journa WARSAW, Ind., Aug. 9.—The special featnre of the Pythian encampment to-day was the visit of the brigade to the city. where it paraded the principal streets. The threatening weather last night caused a great many of the Sir Knights to go home sooner than they had expected, have preferred charges of embezzlement. It but enough were left to make very attractive parade. The heavy clouds which have overhung the camp for the past twenty-four hours, have failed to send down more than a sprinkle, and the gay decorations and uniforms have not suffered on that account. This handsome little city put on its holiday clothes Monday, and to-day every additional puff and frill possible in the way of decorations emblematic of the order were donned, and the parade passed through a perfect sea of yellow, red and blue. The brigade (except the mounted officers who rode on horseback) was taken to the city over the P., Ft. W. & C. railway, and was formed for the parade in the following orders. lowing order:

Brigadier-general Ross and staff, mounted. Whiteland Band. First Regiment Battalion, Col. B. A. Richardson, Second Regiment Battalion, Col. E. G. Herr, Third Regiment Battalion, Lieut.-Col. W. O. Barnard, commanding.

New Castle K. of P. Band.

Fourth Regiment Battalion, Col. A. D. Vanosdol, Fifth Regiment Battalion, Col. N. V. Cole, com-Sixth Regiment Battalion, Col. R. E. Graves, commanding.

The streets were crowded by a cheering multitude during the parade, seemingly being composed of the entire population of the city and the citizen-campers.

The preparations for the fire-works have been placed in the hands of Capt. Seth Baldwin, of the steamer Welcome. The display will be a novelty, and will consist of a naval engagement, supplemented by illuminations in colored lights on the shore. "Fort Moultrie," which is already built in the lake, being left there from the Fourth of July, will be attacked by masked batteries and other forts and retaken from the rebel forces, who are supposed to hold it now, having captured it on the Fourth. The engagement will last an hour and a half, and Fort Moultrie will be blown into half, and Fort Moultrie will be blown into the sea after being captured. Captain Baldwin never does anything by halves, and promises a great show to the people in and promises a great show to the people in camp. This afternoon he took an excursion party around the lake on his steamer and delivered quite a lecture on the different points of interest. Among the party were Generals Carnahan and Ross, Judge Advocate Denny and Major Ross, with their wives, and the Whiteland band, which divided the time with the captain and discoursed some excellent music and discoursed some excellent music.

The boys, who seemingly never sleep, were on the war-path again last night, making life burdensome to those who wanted to sleep. About 2 o'clock they organized a band and serenaded the barracks and camp. General Carnahan was entertained by them, and responded with a box of cigars. Their music made up in volume whatever it lacked in harmony. The instruments were tin horns and a great variety of tin pans, purloined from the cooking tent at the main dining-hall.

Attached to the Fourth Regiment is a battalion of home guards under command of Captain Weaver.

These guards are organized as foragers for the regiment, and have been very success-ful, bringing in large quantities of chick-ens, roasting-ears, and other good things which they found growing wild on the trees in the park.
To-night there was a business-meeting of the brigade officers at Gen. Ross's head-quarters, but their deliberations had not ended at the time this dispatch was written.

The active duties of the encampment are practically ended, and the remainder of the time will be given up solely to recreation. The two bands each gave an excellent concert this evening, entertaining the camp in Doubtful as to Its Color.

About 8 o'clock last night the police were informed that a child had been left on the door-step of a Mrs. Sadie Dranseld, No. 81 Missouri street, and an officer was sent to make an investigation. The babe was not more than a day old, and unmistakably of mixed parentage. It was taken to the Colored Orphans' Home, where, however, the matron at first refused to accept it, as she claimed it was white. She was prevailed upon to keep it until this morning, on condition that, if Dr. Hodges declares the child to be white, it is to be removed to the proper orphans' home.

Would Not Let Him See the Books. John C. Fullenwider and Charles Ludwig have disagreed regarding some of their business aftairs, which they transacted as partners. Fullenwider has applied for a receiver, his principal cause of complaint being the alleged unwillingness of Ludwig to let him look at the partnership books.

Challenge to a Foot Race.

H. Gardiner, of New York, challenges Fry or any other man to run a foot race on conditions to be agreed upon. He also declares his willingness to put up any sum from $25 to $100, to be deposited at Graney's place on East Washington street.
